

Language: the means of Communication cum Globalization

Dr. Pratibha Rastogi

Assit.Prof., Dept. of Education,
Jyoti College of Management Science and Technology Bareilly,
MJP Rohilkhand University Bareilly, Uttar Pradesh 243001(INDIA)
Email: pratibha01rastogi@gmail.com

Abstract: At present, in the age of globalization the whole world become a global village, it become necessary for learner to understand different languages and present oneself in the best way before the world. Various international companies are inviting the linguists and interpreter because language is the basic tool of communication and better communication is the base of the success of any business or trade. Some steps may be taken in the field of education and teaching to raise awareness among the students about the importance of knowing different languages at the regional, national and international level for the bright future and career as a linguist, translator or interpreter in the field of business, services, publication, media, ambassadors, travels and tourism etc. Thus we can say that at present language learning has a wide scope of opportunities not only in India but also in abroad, it dissolves our narrow thinking of caste, creed, religion, region, nationality, gender-difference and tie us in the golden thread of love, mutual understanding and international integration.

Key Words: Language, human civilization, understanding of literature, globalization.

Language: the means of Communication cum Globalization

Language is like a ‘Prism’ which is reflecting the manifold shades of human knowledge and activity. Language and life are interconnected, life always runs ahead and language follows it. Human are gifted with a rare quality of speech which make him distinguish to the other living beings. So, we can say we all are living in the world of words and learn how to think, feel and judge the things through our language. The experiences, dreams and wisdom of past generations are subtly and ineradicably preserved in language. Language makes possible the communication of meanings and the sharing of experiences among the people, enabling them to form an enduring society and to create and transmit a distinctive culture. The rich heritage of great ideas and actions passes over to the young generation in terms of its language. In the nation like India the people need to know three languages – regional language that is one’s mother-tongue, national language, that socializes’ the behavior of the whole nation and the international language that might be ‘commonly used’ by all the nations, at least in international affairs, far from the barriers of nationalities, political entities and other dividing walls of humanity..

From the very beginning of human civilization, language has been accepted as a major vehicle for conveying thoughts and feelings and there by preserving our experiences and establishing relationship in the society. But it is also true that one can think more and more only when he has the vast knowledge of language and its literature. Just imagine a person who is illiterate, unable to read the literature of any language, though he know the language, he may have a wide range of life experiences, yet will remain so far from the world of words, such as the Dramas of Shakespeare, the articles of Bhagavad Gita, Mahabharata and Ramayana, Illied and Odisy and a lots of literature written in prose and poetry in Hindi, Sanskrit and English etc. The reading of these classic text and modern literature effects on us in an interesting manner, escape us from narrow thinking of time, place, caste and creed and finally force for socializing our behavior.

In the nation like India the people need to know three languages – regional language that is one’s mother-tongue, ‘socializes’ the behavior of the people living in a region, while a national language ‘socializes’ the behavior of the whole nation. The national language integrates the different strands of human thought in to the main stream of national life. The national and regional languages are complementary to each other. They are not rivals. Beyond this perception of regional and national language we talk about international language–a language that may be ‘commonly used’ by all the nations, at least in international affairs. Such a language is always remain above the barriers of nationalities, political entities and other dividing walls of humanity. It always encourages the integration of world cultures. The knowledge of various languages help in promoting the mutual understanding and breaking the barriers of region and nationality. Thus the knowledge of languages is the greatest force or means of intellectual integration by increasing our thinking power.

In the words of Louis H. Gray, “It (Language) is physical and external manifestation of a non-physical (emotional, intellectual, spiritual) and internal state, an endeavor to represent materially what is immaterial.” So the main function of language is to communicate thoughts, feelings and emotions either in writing or in speech. Language and life are interrelated, though life always runs ahead and language follows it. The course of human evaluation begins with ‘simple’ and grew into ‘complex’. The scope of language widened day by day with the widening scope of human activity. The best human thoughts, intellectual in formations, even each and every experiences of life can be preserve in the form of books or literature only because of language. When our words fail to convey our feelings and emotions we prefer a ‘meaningful silence’ and start thinking in the Shunya, it is the aesthetic aspect of language , that enable us to realize the conditions and truth of life. The authors’ poets and dramatist are such persons who serve the language through literature and keep the life and language living together

The knowledge of languages effects on ones personality. The mother tongue is employed essentially at family and in community gatherings. In India, the infants hear at least two-three languages within the family itself here, the mother tongue, most probably Hindi becomes ‘the language of emotions’ occupying the affective domain whereas English become the language of thoughts’ and occupies the cognitive domain of the individual. But such a crude division seems to occur only when the individual consciously tries to develop proficiency in the language. The conscious effort implies the risk-taking attitude on the part of the learner. Since expressions improve with practice and one can enter in the ‘active’ field from the ‘passive’ world of one’s linguistic repertoire. It is language through-which one can perceive around the world’ it can create or recreate virtual world in his imagination. It helps in developing higher thinking skills requisite for analytical purpose and planning for future.

At present, in the age of globalization, the working conditions are decreasing the boundaries of the nations day by day, so to understand the culture of various nations it become necessary to become a learner of different languages and present oneself in the best way before the world. One can easily intake his bright future or career as a linguist, translator or interpreter in any field. Various international companies are inviting the linguists and interpreter because language is the basic tool of communication and better communication is the base of success of any business or trade. Sometime language raise doubts in people’s mind about what you actually want to speak.

In the age of globalization there is also a need to raise awareness about the importance of gender-neutral language for eliminating gender bias of the communication. This is the age of equality in the whole universe; there is no difference between men and women at the workplace and in society. So in the language the gender-marked terms should be used fairly to strike an overall gender balance. The linguists can persuade the majority in this favor rather the enforcement. One can create a guideline in this regard of gender-neutral language because in some countries laws exist regarding the use of gender-friendly language in certain situations, such as job advertisements. So this step in the field of equality in language may take the form of parallel treatment for men and women and can justify the globalization in a true sense in this 21st century.

Some steps can be taken in the field of education and teaching to raise awareness among the students about the importance of knowing different languages at the regional, national and international level for the bright future and career in the field of business, services, publication, media ambassadors, travels and tourism etc.

1. There is an urgent need to announce the national policy on language orientation.
2. The recommendations of ‘National Knowledge Commission’ must be accepted by the government such as the establishment of the ‘National Translation Mission’.
3. Some orientation programmes should be introduced on languages to analysis the possibilities of job in the field of language.
4. Certificate and diploma courses must be start in the inter colleges and degree colleges to develop the interest of the students in learning different languages.
5. Students ought to be motivated to know the regional, national and international culture through language.
6. The educated persons should come ahead and impart the cultural integration to understand and analyze the ancient heritage and civilization.
7. The computer teachers and engineers must work to introduce some new software programs to help in doing research studies in language.

8. The students must be motivated to learn language not only for job and business but also for starting a dialogue between culture, civilization, values, religion, economic and social development.
9. There must be a special guidance and counseling cell in the colleges which helps the students in choosing the career in the field of language in the present era of globalization.

Studying and understanding of literature through language offers a challenging and personally rewarding experience to strengthen the decision making skills and to improve one's problem solving capacity and helping them in capacity building. The language doesn't mean a language only, it is in itself a specific culture, custom and bunch of values which enlighten the learners and make them better individual, better businessman and above all nice a human being. Thus we can say that at present language learning has a wide scope opportunities not only in India but also in different countries, it dissolves our narrow thinking of caste, creed, religion, region, nationality, gender-difference, it tie us in the golden thread of love, mutual understanding and international integration.

REFERENCES:

1. Career plus, Turning point (2007). Anuvad, Amar Ujala, New Delhi. Sep. 26th Page-7.
2. Jain, R.K. and Sharma, C.K. (2005). Essentials of English Teaching. Vinod Pustak Mandir, Agra-2.
3. Deshmukh Vijaya. (2005) Gender friendly Communication. University News, 43(46), Nov 14-20. AIU. New Delhi. pp. 3-4.
4. Natraj, Sulabha (2006). Teaching English in the Multilingual Context in English Medium Schools in India. University News, 43(52), Dec 26, 2005 – Jan 01, 2006. AIU. New Delhi. pp 7-10.
5. P.Geeta. (2006). Management through Literature. University News, 44 (16), April 17-23. AIU, New Delhi. pp 9-11.